

‘Managing the Psychological Aspects of Risk’

The issue of risk in project management is a crucial one but little account is taken of the unique contribution that people's individual differences play in the management of risk. Research carried out to date has demonstrated that individual personality plays a part in the extent to which we are risk takers or risk averse. See Sharon's article here to find out more: Personality & Risk